FEMA Independent Study Assignments

The U. S. Department of Homeland Security – FEMA Emergency Management Institute has an extensive list of courses available for those in emergency services and others to better enable them to function in an emergency. Many of these courses are required by federal and state law as prerequisites for employment in any of the emergency services, such as fire, police, or EMS professions. Some of the courses are prerequisites for certain certifications (such as EMT certification).

As part of the Protective Services Academy, Cadets are required to complete some of the courses, while others are suggested as recommended to expand your training and preparation to function in an emergency. Instructors may facilitate some of the courses in the classroom and are available to assist the Cadet at any time. Time will be allocated for course work during the school day when the schedule permits. Cadets are required to take the final exam for each course and either email or submit a copy of the DHS/FEMA certificate to the instructor.

Courses and course material can be located online at www.training.fema.gov/is/ and the website is posted in the “Favorites” drop down list on the student laptops.
